This production is entered in the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival (KC/ACTF). The aims of this national theater education program are to identify and promote quality in college-level theater production. To this end, each production entered is eligible for a response by a regional KC/ACTF representative, and certain students are selected to participate in KC/ACTF programs involving awards, scholarships, and special grants for actors, playwrights, designers, and critics at both the regional and national levels.

Productions entered on the Participating level are eligible for inclusion at the KC/ACTF regional festival and can also be considered for invitation to the KC/ACTF national festival at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, DC in the spring of 2003.

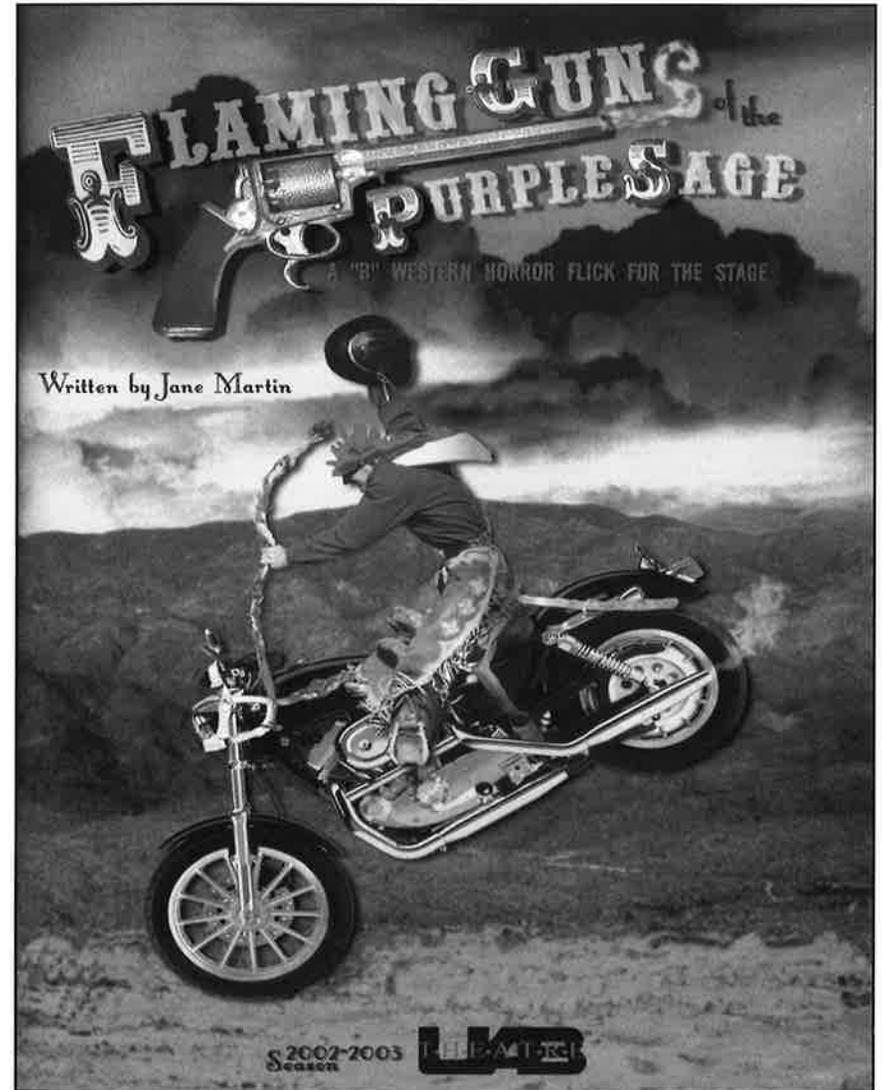

Last year more than 1,200 productions and 198,000 students participated in the American College Theater Festival nationwide. By entering this production, our department is sharing in the KC/ACTF goals to help college theater grow and to focus attention on the exemplary work produced in college and university theaters across the nation.

DIRECTOR'S NOTES

Some things you should know.....

The "B Western," popular in the 50's, was a low budget movie in which cowboys lived by the Code of the West, triumphed over desperados, and rode off into the sunset. These films were not made for first-run release, but were primary fodder for afternoon matinees populated by hordes of children.

"Horror Flicks" were another "B" group of the 50's. Due to a bad guy's actions a monster terrorized a town, the bad guy was revealed, the monster defeated, and goodness was restored.

The "Code of the West," was popularized by western writer Zane Grey. Part myth and part reality, it was an unwritten code of values for people who lived in a region of the country without laws. The basic tenets of the "Code" were sincerity, loyalty, generosity, simplicity and self-reliance. An honest man who took care of his horse, respected women and the environment, only engaged in fair fights, and never drank to excess was the ideal.

"Jane Martin" is the penname for a playwright who has been very popular and successful, and is noted for exploring, exploding and celebrating the values, myths and cultural phenomena that make us uniquely American.

The action of the play takes place on April 1 for a reason.

How DO we pick our plays, and why?

We are regularly asked these questions, and with every subtextual tone imaginable. As this season will undoubtedly raise a few eyebrows, I thought it best to provide some answers. First, let me say that play selection is not rocket science, and there is no formula guaranteed to please every taste. Most successful theatre companies develop a particular style and attract a particular audience pleased by that style. At many universities, play selection is simply a matter of allowing directors to select whatever they would like to do.

As an educational theatre, we believe we are obligated to goals other than building a patron base or simply serving the whims of our faculty. We are obligated to provide our students (as performers, designers, technicians and audience) with a broad range of experience. We are obligated to introduce them to the classics as well as the contemporaries, the realistic as well as the stylized, and to works from a variety of cultures.

At the beginning of each academic year, the UAB Department of Theatre begins the process of selecting the next year's season. We have established a rotation of 16 different categories, guaranteeing that in a four year cycle a student will have the opportunity to experience at least one production from each of those categories. Faculty and students are invited to submit titles of plays for consideration, and over the next few months, we work together to narrow the list. The criteria include everything from design considerations to casting challenges to topicality of themes to resources and budget. The reduced list is then arranged into a myriad of possible combinations until one emerges as the best possible season for us.

It's not rocket science, but we believe it takes us where we want to go.
