Materials Applications Research Center (MARC)

The UAB School of Engineering is rapidly gaining national and international recognition for its advanced materials technologies development and its focus on rapid transition of these technologies into a wide variety of engineering applications. This is a major focus area for the School that is having significant impact on local and regional businesses, resulting in opportunities for manufacturing jobs growth for Alabama.

Converting an old campus warehouse into a modern applied engineering research center.