HCOP and Sparkman Center for Global Health Position Announcement

The Department of Health Care Organization and Policy, School of Public Health, University of Alabama at Birmingham seeks an assistant professor, non-tenure earning. The successful candidate will hold a Ph.D. or equivalent degree in a suitable field such as medical sociology, epidemiology, economics, health policy, or related area but with an international focus. The candidate should have clear program, research or education interests in international health and/or development. We are particularly interested in a candidate with international and leadership experience. If accepted, the applicant will initially work closely with the Sparkman Center for Global Health and School of Public Health leadership to develop their graduate and undergraduate educational programs. This will involve being course master for 3-4 courses in the graduate Global Health Certificate program and possible instruction in 1-2 undergraduate courses. Once the educational programs are well established, there will be opportunities for international program development through the Sparkman Center. Applicants should send a letter of interest, curriculum vita, and the names of references.
