MORISMA-AMORISMA

Music by Arnold Schoenberg & Iannis Xenakis Choreography by Melanie Grebel

CAST

Oedipus, King of Thebes •••••••••• David Anderson Jocasta, his wife ••••••••••••••••••••• Marjorie Rogers Fate, Teiresias, a blind prophet ••••••••• Tina Trinkler

The Children of Oedipus & Jocasta:
- Antigone ••••••••••••••••••••• Janis Oliver
- Ismene ••••••••••••••••••••• Anne-Marie Lake
- Polynices ••••••••••••••••••••• Ann-Britt Gay
- Eteocles ••••••••••••••••••••• Hope Dixon

Depicted Scenes Players:
- Oedipus ••••••••••••••••••••• Jack Cannon
- Father of Oedipus •••••••••••••••••• Jesse B. McElroy

The title is derived from "Moros" meaning fate or death. Morisma refers to that which occurs as an act of fate and Amorisma (with the privative "a" added), signifies that which happens without the interference of fate.

"And Oedipus, the man whose sorrows on human being should suffer, has left this world and all his pain in a way that all mortals will envy."

OEDIPUS AT COLONUS, translation by Frederick Williams

Production Notes

These three plays were written and first performed over 2,400 years ago in Athens—we are separated from them by time, place, and language. Yet a modern audience can also easily recognize the men and the women who think that their own power or wisdom or good intentions are enough. The cry of kings is the cry of all mankind.

Although Sophocles' words are timeless, even the best translations of Sophocles rarely last for more than a generation. These exciting new translations are faithful to the ancient Greek original, but are written in today's language. They were completed in 1984, and this is their world premiere performance.

"... the 15 year old government of the Sudan was overthrown today in a military coup led by the Defense Minister according to statements by the new government."
The New York Times, April 7, 1985

Lalibala is an ancient African city where a 12th-century king carved 10 churches from a solid rock mountainside. Ritual services are still performed there today.
