A Special Partnership with Artist Homer O. Johnson

The antique piano with ancestral African carvings is the focal point of the late August Wilson’s Pulitzer Prize winning play, The Piano Lesson. Every producing company faces the daunting task of recreating an heirloom of such striking beauty and provocative nostalgia as to incite an enduring family feud. To achieve the realism the designers were striving for, UAB Theatre researched regional sources for a craftsman specializing in African wood carving. The Kentuck Festival, nationally recognized for the quality and diversity of artistic styles ranging from folk, traditional to contemporary arts, provided the name of Tuskegee artist Homer O. Johnson, and a special partnership was formed. UAB designer Cliff Simon and student scene designer Monica Hooper worked closely with Johnson, providing specifications for the panels covering an antique upright. Johnson’s artistry brings the ancestors of Boy Willie and Berniece, central characters of The Piano Lesson, to life. His work with UAB Theatre led to a special exhibit of his other works at The Birmingham Civil Rights Institute through March 26. Information on the exhibit is available by calling the BRCI at (205) 328-9696.

Homer Johnson was born at John Andrew Hospital in Tuskegee, Alabama in 1958. He attended St. Joseph Elementary School and graduated from Tuskegee Institute High in 1976. After graduation Johnson joined the U.S. Army and served three years in Europe for his full tour of duty.

Upon his return to the U.S. Johnson resided in Atlanta, Georgia, where he met George “Ju Ju” Ferrell Jr., an accomplished jewelry maker. Through his association with Ferrell, Johnson began making jewelry and, after a few years branched out into clay and metal sculpting. This new passion prompted him to enroll in Atlanta Junior College to study art. Johnson graduated in June 1990 with an Associate of Arts degree and soon after relocated to Tuskegee because of his mother’s ill health.

In 1994 Johnson changed mediums out of necessity. He explains, “I tried my hand at wood carving because it was the only medium that was available to me. I taught myself to carve faces and learned a few techniques from an associate. I worked with a small roofing company to earn a meager living.”

Since his mother’s passing in March 2000 Johnson has devoted all his spare time to wood carving and various kinds of wood work, most of them African American related. Johnson’s thoughts tend toward the spiritual when talking about the chain of events that led him to regional recognition.

“God has blessed me with this talent to share with anyone who can relate. The message in my art is create, educate and elevate yourself.”

Director's Notes

The Piano Lesson is a story that needs to be heard. August Wilson has crafted a play which focuses on many experiences of the Charles Family. The family serves as the particular inhabitants of a world that is peopled by countless others and has effected and has impacted the entirety of civilization. For though the background of The Piano Lesson is slavery, that "peculiar institution", its foreground is humanity. Mr. Wilson chronicles the several journeys of the Charles family. We have the benefit of the record of August Wilson's writing to take us with him. Boy Willie, Berniece, Doaker, Wining Boy, Avery, Lymon and young Maretha have no such benefit. They must rely upon what has emerged as the foremost vehicle for African American heritage in the modern age: the oral tradition. And beyond that the representation of legacy and lineage in the handcrafted work of artisans that were deprived the opportunity to tell their stories. The journeys that each of these family members embarks upon will appear, in many ways, particular to their heritage. Yet, as we watch the passion of their struggle, the universal comes forward, and we recognize the essence of the underlying question which burns within each of us: Who am I?

The exploration of this single question, through the genius of Mr.
Wilson, uncovers the complexities of still deeper questions and issues of faith, heritage, family, self-awareness, metamorphosis, independence, and the permutations of bondage which still haunt our lives.
