Productions entered on the Participating level are eligible for invitation to the KCACTF regional festival and may also be considered for national awards recognizing outstanding achievement in production, design, direction and performance.

Last year more than 1,300 productions were entered in the KCACTF involving more than 200,000 students nationwide. DANCING AT LUGHNASHA

By Brian Friel

Dramaturgical Notes:

Dancing at Lughnasa, by Brian Friel (1929-2015), tells the life of the Mundy sisters—Kate, Maggie, Agnes, Rosie and Christina—during the month of August, 1936 in Donegal, Northern Ireland. It is a “memory play” that presents the events through the eyes of Christina’s son, Michael. Since its opening in 1990 at the Abbey Theatre in Dublin, the play has gained high acclaims, taking countries like Ireland, England and the United States by storm. It has won multiple awards, including a Tony Award for Best Play in 1992 and the Outer Critic’s Awards 1992. It was even made into a movie starring the legendary Meryl Streep and Michael Gambon. In Dancing at Lughnasa, like in most of his work, Friel depicts the effects of British colonization on Northern Ireland since the 17th century, including cultural isolation, economic constraints, and the constant feeling of inferiority and suppression of the people in the region. Friel also touches on the topic of lost “Irish” identity by recalling his own childhood experiences as well as local traditions.

The Lughnasa festival is an important part of the Mundy sisters’ provincial world and mundane lives. It is a centuries-old celebration of the harvest time, which is held for eleven days in the beginning of August. The festival began as a pagan worship to God Lugh and an expression of hopes for a bountiful harvest of fruit, wheat and other produce. It would be common during the festi­ vale for people to pick bilberries, which are a symbol of a plentiful and healthy year. During Lughnasa, women would make flower garlands or braid flowers into their hair. Men would also wear flowers that look similar to a boutonniere.

At the end of the festival week the participants would bury the flowers to represents the end of summer. The Lughnasa festival could not be complete without the dancing. Dance competitions are organized during the celebration and each member of the winning couple can choose his/her bride/groom. The Irish have found a way to meld the pagan Lughnasa with their Christian tradition so that people could continue to celebrate their beloved festival. For the Mundy sisters, Lughnasa is a symbol of the joy, love, and youth that slowly slip away, as well as a reminder that they can still choose what their future will look like without families of their own.
