New Community & Scientific Action Board (CSAB) to Guide Community-Engaged Research, Support Health Priorities in the Region

Reflecting new opportunities and synergies in collaboration with the Hub’s Center for the Study of Community Health (its CDC-sponsored Prevention Research Center), the CCTS Engagement of Communities initiative has formed a CSAB by merging the Jefferson County Community Participation Board and the CCTS One Great Community Council. Its members are already identifying priorities and gaining momentum.

Get to Know Your CCTS
THIS WEEK, MEET CIARA MITCHELL, MA, RD, LD
CCTS BIONUTRITION RESEARCH DIETICIAN

1 What does the CCTS mean to you?
Working with the CCTS allows me to play a role in helping investigators carry out their studies, while generating new knowledge that can improve the health of individuals and communities. I believe that diet and nutrition is a major factor contributing to the health and outcomes of people in the southeast; so being involved in nutrition studies has always been a passion of mine, which I am able to fulfill while working with the CCTS.

2 If you could take anyone to lunch, who would it be and why?
I would invite General Colin Powell. I am inspired by great leaders, especially leaders who rose to power by hard work, good work ethics, and determination. I also believe that good leadership starts a home. Colin Powell was big on inspiring youth and encouraged consistency and discipline. I would love to learn about how he led his family, his team and what advice he would share with me.

3 What’s your dream vacation or the best vacation you’ve ever taken?
In 2015, I visited Denver Colorado. There we hiked the snowy mountains, snow tubed, went to a Denver Broncos football game, a Denver Nuggets basketball game and enjoyed really good food. What’s more I did all this with my husband and good friends.
