Are you looking to develop better work relationships? Having good working relationships with your co-workers contributes to a happier and more productive work place.

A key component of building a successful work relationship is by modeling the behavior that you want from others. It is important to relate to your colleagues as individuals. A great start is to spend time together by having lunch in a common area or just taking a short break to get coffee and talk.

Building a trusting relationship with your colleagues takes time. Most importantly, “be positive”! This one thing can affect you and those around you.

CALL TO ACTION:
1. Take a coffee break with a colleague that you would like to get to know better.
2. Take time to listen, be positive and speak positively about others. This will contribute to a positive work environment.
3. Write a thank you note to let someone know they are appreciated.

KEEP ON LEARNING
- Read this article 5 ways to develop more meaningful relationships at work by Inc.com.
- Read this article How to Build Effective Working Relationships by Chron.com.
- Join us for Developing Positive Relationships at Work, September 19 | 1pm