PUBLICATION

THIS MONTH IN ANESTHESIA HISTORY
  September 26, 1818: English obstetrician and physiologist James Blundell is the first to transfuse human blood into another human. Earlier efforts at transfusion had used animal blood. Although the patient in this initial attempt died, Blundell continued his efforts in a total of ten patients, five of whom survived. Blundell published a physiology and pathology text in 1824 and books on obstetrics [1834] and diseases in women [1837]. An article about his transfusion work is Myhre BA. James Blundell—pioneer transfusionist. Transfusion 35:74-78, 1995; an article about his entire professional career is Young JH. James Blundell (1790-1878): Experimental physiologist and obstetrician. Medical History 8:159-169, 1964. The Anesthesia History Calendar can be found at http://ahahq.org/Calendar/Calendar.php
