THIS MONTH IN ANESTHESIA HISTORY

September 1, 1832: Ephraim Cutter, American physician and inventor of the laryngoscope, is born. Cutter died in New York on April 25, 1917. In its brief obituary, the British Medical Journal noted that “He was one of the early American laryngologists, and invented many instruments.” He received his undergraduate degree from Yale in 1852 and medical degree from Harvard in 1856. On a visit to Europe in 1862, Cutter met the German physiologist Johann N. Czermak and viewed the photograph Czermak had made of his own larynx. In November 1865 Cutter spent a week testing apparatus and methods with photographer F. Willard Hardy as he photographed Cutter’s larynx. In addition to this work and his many instrument designs, Cutter was a prolific author of medical papers on many topics and a pioneer of microphotography. An 1867 paper in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal [now the New England Journal of Medicine] was entitled “On the modes of administration of systemic anaesthetics.” The Anesthesia History Calendar can be found at http://ahahq.org/Calendar/Calendar.php
