GRADUATE NURSING EDUCATION PRIMARY CARE SCHOLARS

An Initiative to.... Transform the Health of Alabama

The UAB School of Nursing (SON) wants to improve the quality of life for all Alabamians, especially those who have limited health care access. Through targeted programs, the school is devoted to increasing the number of primary care advanced practice registered nurses (APRNs), building partnerships to break down barriers, and increasing access to health care in rural and under-served areas.

In Alabama, 55 of the state's 67 counties are rural and 62 counties have a shortage of primary care providers. This health professional shortage affects more than 1.6 million Alabamians. With support from the Daniel Foundation of Alabama, the UAB School of Nursing is working to overcome one of the most challenging issues facing our state by training providers who want to live and serve in these rural areas.

Goals of the Graduate Nursing Education Primary Care Scholars (GNEPCS) Initiative:

- Create a pipeline of nurses from rural Alabama counties for recruitment into primary care APRN programs (FNP, AGNP, PNP, WHNP, CNM, PMHNP) as Primary Care Scholars
- Offer Primary Care Scholars additional mentoring and curricular components specific to primary care practice in rural areas
- Establish primary care clinical training sites in Alabama's rural and under-served areas where Primary Care Scholars can gain hands-on experience working with exceptional rural providers
- Support Primary Care Scholars and current rural primary care APRNs through a media-based education service presented by the School of Nursing's faculty
- Provide ongoing professional development that meets the needs of rural primary care providers, preceptors, and Primary Care Scholars through activities such as webinars, an annual Summit, and leadership conferences
- Engage a network of primary care providers across rural Alabama
- Create primary care APRN leaders in rural health for Alabama and beyond
